Klan Plank Causes Further Delay

Democratic Platform Committee After Stormy All-Night Session Deferred Further Fighting Until Afternoon—Freedom of Speech Overshadowed Underlying Principles for Which It Was Invoked.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, June 28.—The Democratic party was locked in a death grapple over the Ku Klux Klan issue today after a night of angry but unrewarded fighting among the leaders of its resolutions committee failed to break the impasse which has tied the hands of the platform builders for four days.

From soon after midnight until long after dawn the committee jumped from the anti-Klan frying pan into the Klan fire, then back into the frying pan, and in the end adjourning until 1:30 o'clock this afternoon without having reached a semblance of agreement. The sentiment of the committee best was expressed by William Jennings Bryan when, in explaining to the committee behind closed doors that the Klan fight was one between Protestant and Catholic, he said:

"We may touch a spark here which may spread a conflagration throughout the world."

The issue was whether or not to denounce the Ku Klux Klan by name or whether the party should pledge itself to rid the country of unnamed secret organizations inimical to freedom of religious and political expression.

South Fears Effect on Vote.

A majority group led by southern Democrats opposed naming the Klan, feeling that to do so would throw the border states into the Republican fold in the November election. A small but determined minority faction, headed by Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, demanded that the hooded realm be stamped with its own K. K. K.

League Plank a Compromise.

Every other plank in the platform was completed by the committee, including the perplexing one of the League of Nations, over which a spirited fight had waged since Tuesday. The League plank was a compromise of several plans and satisfied everybody except Newton D. Baker, formerly secretary of war, who threatened to carry a minority fight to the floor of the convention demanding immediate entry of the United States in the Geneva tribunal.

The committee's plank expressed sympathy with the League as an organization to prevent war but pledged the party to take no action toward joining until a referendum was submitted to the people.

A Victory for McAdoo.

The League plank was regarded more as a victory for William G. McAdoo than any other candidate for he has repeatedly spoken in favor of a referendum on the question.

Worked Until 5:30 a. m.

It was a group of sad faced men that left the committee room at 5:30 o'clock in the ancient Madison Square Hotel when the deadlock could not be broken.

Only Two Would Talk.

With two exceptions they waved questioners aside and strode through the lobby. The two exceptions were the chairman Homer S. Cummings, still able to smile, and Senator Walsh, angry, determined, unflinching. Cummings explained briefly that they had been unable to agree and had adjourned until this afternoon. He asked to be excused of answering any queries.

Walsh repeated what he had said all night—that there were two groups, one of which had to give up. He repeated that it would not be the group he led.

Senator Cummings's Statement.

Cummings dictated this statement to newspaper correspondents who had sat as sentinels all night outside the committee door:

"We have been discussing at great length the question of that plank in the platform dealing with religious freedom. Differences of opinion existed as to the phraseology of the proposed plank. The discussions were so prolonged and the subject of such importance that it was decided to adjourn the committee until 1:30 o'clock this afternoon. No vote was taken at any stage of the proceedings."

Fistic Oratory on Tables.

That colorless announcement cloaked a struggle that reached at times great intensity. So vehement were the arguments that shouts and the noise of fists striking tables filtered through the heavy doors.

Every sort of oratorical means were employed to sway the opponents.

Bryan Deplores Fanaticism.

William Jennings Bryan got the floor. The same soft voice that once rocked the nation with its "cross of gold" utterance appealed to the sentiment of the committee members. It pictures religious warfare such as smeared the middle ages with the blood of fanatics and the charcoal of the fagot again threatening an orderly civilization. The commoner expressed fear that a terrific blaze of fanaticism might rush around the globe as once it stampeded over Europe.

King Tries Logic.

Then through the cracks and crannies came the earnest, incisive voice of Senator King of Utah, the scholar, trying to stamp the embers of dissension with logic.

Walsh Demands Definiteness.

The deep bass tones of Senator Walsh boomed out. He commanded Democracy to cease dilly-dallying and say where it stood.

Some Who Spoke Quietly.

Key Pittman from Nevada, who once argued with a gun in the western mining camps and now argues with oratory and intelligence in the senate of the United States, had his say. What it was, could not be determined by those outside greedily listening for any word that seeped through the crevices.

Senator Kendrick of Wyoming sat silently and listened, as he sits silently in the senate and listens. What he had to say was spoken quietly.

Senator Stephens of Mississippi chewed industriously at his tobacco and tried to picture what would come of it if the little battle being fought in that small room were puffed into a major fight in the Madison Square Garden arena.

There was a little red haired man from some southern state, saying too much, some thought, but going on saying it none the less.

There was a fat and sporty looking man from the west, in an incongruous gay straw hat and white shoes that mocked his sober face, awed by the name of Bryan.

Free Speech Had Its Right.

Religious freedom fared doubtfully, but freedom of speech had its day—or its night-all night.

As the brilliant electric lights of the committee room faded in the daze of the sun that shone in through the open windows, several last minute efforts were made to dispose of the issue so that the platform could be ready for the morning session of the committee. A small, shrill voice demanded:

"Let's call the roll of states at once. Let's get this thing done. Everyone knows how he is going to vote."

Chairman Cummings was unable to restore order for fully five minutes.

"No, no, let's have the convention adjourn until Monday so we can thresh this thing out" came another shout.

Bryan Favors Night Session.

Bryan interrupted. He asked that the session go over until this afternoon and that the convention be ready for the report at 8 o'clock tonight. It was Bryan who led the fight to omit the Klan's name.

Klan Doesn't Worry Oklahoma.

"Down in my state we don't worry about the Klan; we know how to handle them" retorted Senator Owen of Oklahoma.

Francis X. Busch, of Illinois, was said then to have suggested that the Klan be denounced by name "if the charges against the organization are true," This was howled down.

"I warn you, gentlemen if you name the Klan you will find the border states going to the Republican column," said Governor Cameron Morrison of North Carolina.

Free Speech Clouds Religion.

The shouting, the vituperative language, the warnings that whatever stand the party took would lose votes, few back and forth.

The committee members realized the path to peace at the time was hopeless. They agreed to the recess.

After a wink or two of sleep, the leaders of both factions expressed confidence that an agreement would be reached today. Both sides thought the other would recede. It seemed more likely, however, that with the convention in angry mood over the tardiness of the platform report, the committee would go to the floor with both a majority and minority report where the four day battle again would be fought all over, perhaps more bitterly and with more disaster to party harmony.

Didn't Pay; Locked Up.

Clayton Ticefeldt, who was arrested by State Troopers on June 19 for recklessly driving an automobile, promised to pay the fine of $25 which was imposed by Justice of the Peace Charles R. Tiller of West Hurley, within a week, but on his failure to pay was taken in custody and locked in jail. The alternative of payment is 25 days in jail.

Sunday School Picnic Postponed.

The Sunday school picnic of the First Reformed Church and Bethany Chapel which was to have been held next Monday, has been postponed. The date will be announced later.

Kingston Savings Bank 50 Years Old

Well Known Institution First Opened For Business June 29, 1874—Its Growth Since That Time.

The Kingston Savings Bank today completed the first half century of its business existence and on Monday enters upon its fifty-first year with a record of financial accomplishment in which every resident of Ulster county, whether a depositor or not, may justly take pride.

From Small Beginnings.

From total deposits of only $611, received from nineteen depositors, on the first day of its business existence, June 29, 1874, the Kingston Savings Bank, backed by public confidence and careful trusteeship, has grown steadily, until today its total deposits and surplus amount to more than ten thousand times that sum, and its number of depositors has increased to 7417.

From humble quarters in what at that time was the Romeyn building, now known as the Cordts building, at No. 293 Wall street, adjoining the Ulster county court house, then passing to more extensive quarters in the Kingston Argus building, which since has been removed, the Kingston Savings Bank for nearly twenty-five years has owned and occupied exclusively its own building, designed especially for banking purposes, occupying a site which still adjoins the Ulster county court house.

People Wanted Another Bank.

At the time the Kingston Savings Bank was organized fifty years ago, there were already two savings banks in Kingston, but a feeling developed among the citizens of the city and county that an additional savings bank should be located here. This feeling finally materialized in the organizing of the bank under the name which it still has, Kingston Savings Bank.

In order to accomplish organization, a special act of the New York state legislature was needed, and the law under which the Kingston Savings Bank was formed was Chapter 237 of the Laws of 1874. The new bank was chartered April 23, 1874.

The Bank's Incorporators.

The new bank's organizers included not only some of the leading and most substantial business men of Kingston city, itself an infant city only two years old, but also of the adjacent towns. The Kingston Savings Bank was really the first worthwhile enterprise to be formed and incorporated after the incorporation of the city itself, and throughout their respective periods of existence which began so near together, the Kingston Savings Bank and the city of Kingston have exhibited just pride in each other's growth, prosperity and prestige.

Twenty-two men were the incorporators of the Kingston Savings Bank upon its organization, and all except five were chosen to form its first board of trustees, which numbered seventeen members.

The incorporators were:
Jacob B. Van Deusen
Augustus T. Newton
Henry C. Connelly
Dr. Robert Loughran
James Van Leuven
James Myer, Jr.
William H. Romeyn
George S Coutant
Lucius Lawson
Michael Hallahan
Luke Noone
Isaac Bernstein
Abram H. Vandling
John R. Freer
James S. Pine
Charles H. Clearwater
Dr. Frederick W. Ingalls
William H. Fredenburgh
James H. VanDemark
Benjamin Turner
Jacob Freileweh
Augustus Schoonmaker, Jr.

First Directors and Officers.

The first board of trustees was composed of all the foregoing incorporators with the exception of Jacob B. Van Deusen, Michael Hallahan, Abraham Vandling, James S. Pine and James H. Van Demark.

The trustees met on June 4, 1874, and elected Henry C. Connelly, president; Augustus T. Newton and Dr. Frederick W. Ingalls, vice-presidents; Augustus Schoonmaker, Jr., attorney. One week later, on June 11, 1874, the trustees elected William H. Finch, treasurer.

As Business Grew.

The Romeyn building, in which the Kingston Savings Bank was first housed, is still standing and is one of the landmarks of Wall street. It was then owned by the late William H. Romeyn, who published The Kingston Journal, which many years later was purchased by and consolidated with The Kingston Weekly Freeman.

The bank continued to occupy part of the lower floor of the Romeyn building until May 1, 1885, when constantly increasing business required larger quarters and it removed to The Argus building, then adjoining the Ulster county court house property on the opposite side from the Romeyn building. The bank occupied the entire lower floor of The Argus building and continued there until October 1, 1900, when it began the transaction of business in its present building.

The present building was first authorized by the board of trustees in November, 1897, when they decided to erect a building "for banking purposes only." The selection of a site and preparation of plans required some time, and ground was not broken until June 5, 1899.

To Seek Freight Rate Revision

Proposal for Central Hudson Cities to Unite for Freight Rate Revision by Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Associated Industries of New York state has sent an appeal to the local Chamber of Commerce asking that its traffic manager become actively identified with the movement on the part of New York state industries to be adequately represented at hearings soon to be held by the interstate commerce commission. These hearings will bring to a head a controversy which has troubled the traffic world for more than twenty-five years.

The secretaries of the Kingston, Poughkeepsie, Newburgh, Catskill, Hudson and Peekskill Chambers of Commerce, according to R. E. Sagendorf of Poughkeepsie, will be asked to consider a plan to create a joint committee out of the central Hudson region to protect the interests of shippers and retailers in this particular section.

The Region Now Handicapped.

Under existing freight rates, the cities of the Central Hudson are seriously handicapped, it is said, and there is a possibility that at the forthcoming hearings the inequalities and discriminatory features of the present structure will not only be made permanent but other hardships may be imposed, unless measures are adopted for safeguarding the interests of this region.

One reason the cities in the Central Hudson region have never assumed any considerable industrial importance, according to traffic experts, is the unfavorable railroad rate structure applying to this district.

How System Affects Industries.

The existing system of rates has had a definite influence in locating industries elsewhere, and such industries and merchants as are in the valley are handicapped by the present rate structure. An example of this may be cited by one who has studied the situation. A wholesale grocery house in Poughkeepsie selling groceries in—say—Middletown, N. Y., a point about forty miles away, would have to pay the same freight to get its goods to the retailer at Middletown as would a wholesale grocery house in Hartford, Conn. In other words, the wholesale grocers in Hartford, New Haven, etc., can reach into this territory as cheaply as local dealers can. On the other hand, the rate structure is such that if wholesale grocers here wanted to reach—say—Putnam, Conn., a point having the same relationship to Hartford, as Middletown has to Poughkeepsie, they would have to pay 16c per hundred more than Hartford.

Within the next two months, the subject of rate revision in what is known as the trunk line territory, which includes New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, is to be taken up.

I. C. C. Wants Revision.

The interstate commerce commission is insisting upon a revision. Many shippers want the tangle cleared. In a sense, the railroads as well as the well organized areas to the south and to the north are "girding their loins" for a hard battle, each to preserve as much advantage already held, as possible and at the same time to secure as much additional advantage as can be obtained.

It is universally admitted that all freight rates are in a mess. The rate structure is a legacy from the days of small individual roads. When they were taken over and merged into the present great systems, rate schedules were taken over along with the physical property.

The physical property was improved but the rate structures for very good reasons could not be so easily made over. Industries had been planted at strategic points in the old days, located where existing freight schedules were most advantageous.

To upset the rates meant in many cases the absolute ruin of valuable and prosperous industrial enterprises. For half a century the struggle to maintain present advantages has been going on.

Rate Change Now Due.

The time has come it is universally agreed, when there must be a change in rates. Many glaring inequalities exist and where there are no organized agencies for safeguarding the interests of a community or region, such localities are now in a position of great disadvantage.

It is not only manufacturers who are concerned about rates. he classifications cover all forms of freight raw materials and finished products. Every retailer, even in a community where there is not much manufacturing, is affected.

It has long been the belief of men familiar with rates and traffic matters that the cities in the Central Hudson region should have a study made of the conditions prevailing here. Now that there is prospect of a complete revision, it is felt that the need is even more urgent.

Want Survey Made.

It has been suggested that Kingston, Newburgh, and Poughkeepsie, Hudson, Peekskill, Catskill, have enough at stake to warrant joint action. It is believed that a committee should be organized composed of representatives of the Chambers of Commerce, representatives also of the manufacturing interests, the retail interests and possibly the city administrations to procure a statement or survey of the facts as they relate to rates in this region, as well as the rate structure in contiguous territory. Then when hearings are held before the Interstate Commerce Commission, the committee should be represented by a competent rate attorney to insure the safeguarding of the interests of the cities of this region.

Herbert Buckley, chairman of the transportation committee of the Poughkeepsie Chamber of Commerce, and traffic manager of the Dutton Lumber Company, has long been familiar with the situation in the Central Hudson region and is among those who believe that the existing rate structure works decidedly to the disadvantage of this area. He concurs in the belief that the people of the Central Hudson district should be properly represented when the proposed revision is considered. "It is of utmost economic importance to every city in the valley that present unwarranted disability be removed from industry, agriculture or commerce", he declares, "for upon these depend the prosperity of every individual who makes this his home and who gets his living in this region, and that due steps be taken to analyze and thoroughly investigate the new rate proposals to the end that any joker adversely affecting the valley may be discovered and corrected before it becomes effective. When the new rates structure is set up it will have been blessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and in so far as this generation is concerned, it will be like the law of the Medes and Persians. It changeth not."

Convention In Recess, Waiting For Platform

Democratic National Convention Recesses Until 3 p. m. on Senator Cummings' Plea That Party Faces Crisis on Plank Concerning Religious Freedom—Platform Committee Concluded Bitter Session by Reciting Lord's Prayer, Which Bryan Supplemented.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, June 28.—In response to a fervent plea from Homer S. Cummings, chairman of the platform committee, the Democratic National Convention recessed at 11:10 o'clock this morning until 3 p. m. to allow the deadlocked resolutions committee time to try for another agreement on the Ku Klux Klan plank, the argument over which has become so embittered that Cummings told the convention there was danger of a party split.

Cummings's appearance and brief speech before the convention in the Garden this morning was dramatic. He was haggard from loss of sleep and swayed as he stood on the platform.

Bryan Prayed in Committee.

He told the delegates there had been agrement on every plank in the platform save two—the League of Nations and one affecting "religious freedom." The former he minimized, the latter he emphasized. He frankly told the delegates that the differences were so great in the committee on the Klan plank and were so pronounced and so bitter that early this morning all the members of the committee recited the Lord's prayer and that William Jennings Bryan prayed for Divine guidance.

Convention Ready For Fight.

Confronted with a choice of plunging ahead with balloting for the presidency, or of adjourning in order to allow the deadlock platform committee another extension of grace, the Democratic national convention, met again in the Garden this morning with all preliminaries disposed of and ready to take up the serious fighting of this gathering.

Word that the resolutions committee was unable to report an agreement on platform spread rapidly through the Garden as the delegates arrived and there were explosive comments on the floor as little knots of the recollected and discussed the situation.

Police Prepared for Real Fight.

Significant of the convention getting down to the real fighting were the extra forces of uniformed policemen that thronged the Garden today. They were under positive instructions to prevent the gate crashing that has featured the last two previous sessions and resulted in hundreds of non-ticket holders congesting the aisles and keeping the floor in a constant state of confusion.

At every entrance to the Garden the police guard was doubled and trebled and they were stationed at close intervals around the hall, commanded by their own officers, instead of being under the direction of the usual convention officers.

Examine All Credentials.

The credential of every arrival were closely scrutinized and officers were even busy on the floor demanding to see the tickets of those there.

The convention was slower than usual getting under way.

The opening hour at 9:30 found but few delegates in the hall and at 10 o'clock the delegates' sections were only half full.

Leaders Welcome Chance to "Chew."

At 10:15 word spread about the floor that the platform committee would send a delegation to the convention to report the situation and recommend an adjournment until 3 o'clock this afternoon when it was "hoped" the platform builders would have something for the convention to chew on.

Both McAdoo and anti-McAdoo leaders said they would not oppose this move if it came in the form of a strong recommendation by the resolutions committee, but there was muttering of disapproval among the delegates.

"Adjourn.—We want action", seemed to be the general sentiment among the rank and file. "If they can't write a platform we can. It will have to be fought out here anyway sooner or later so why delay it?"

Aisles Clear for First Time.

It was 10:36 before Chairman Walsh called the convention to order. Many of the delegates were absent and the balconies were only partly filled. For the first time since the convention opened the aisles were comparatively clear of bystanders and casual visitors.

Prayer Outlined Convention Needs.

After five minutes of pounding, Walsh introduced the Rev. John Roach Stratton of New York, who delivered an invocation in which he asked for "wisdom in the deliberations of this day."

"We pray that Thou will teach us our responsibilities to Thee."

He prayed for "no compromise with error or evil" and for "old fashioned Americanism."

Song Also Seemed Appropriate.

Then Walsh suggested a song.

It was evident that the leaders were in no hurry to push things along.

"The gravity of the situation that confronts us," said Walsh, "Suggests that we have song as well as prayer."

He led forward Miss Edith Bennett of Concord, N. H., who rendered the Star Spangled Banner" while the delegates and spectators stood in silence.

Miss Bennett wore a gown of gray; with pink hat and scarf.

National Committee Ratifications.

William A. McCorkle of West Virginia, was the first man recognized. He presented a resolution governing the election of ratification of members of the national committee. It was routine business.

Joseph B. Shannon of Kansas City asked what provision was made for filling vacancies on the committee and proposed that state committees be empowered to fill vacancies.

Cox Leader Pessimistic.

While this was going on there were several informal conferences of leaders going on about the floor. In one of these Ed. H. Moore of Ohio, the Cox leader, was insisting that the "Klan issue be not ducked."

"Either the Democratic party must destroy the Klan or the Klan will destroy the party," he said.

McCorkle accepted Shannon's amendment and it passed routinely.

Explains Necessity for Delay.

"The chairman of the committee on resolutions has an announcement," said Walsh.

Homer C. Cummings came forward and was greeted with applause.

"I realize," said Cummings, "that you are impatient to hear the report of the committee on resolutions. I feel a word of explanation is due to this great convention. I will in a few minutes, if you will bear with me, tell you something about the deliberations which have been going on in that committee.

May Affect Party's Destiny.

"I would greatly appreciate your close attention to what I am about to say because in a very large measure it may affect the destiny of our party.

"The committee on resolutions is made up of one representative from each state and territory.

"Last Tuesday about 5 o'clock that committee met. We have held public hearings lasting many hours and almost all night Tuesday and were continued on Wednesday. A subcommittee was then appointed to assemble data and draft the platform. That committee has been in continuous session almost until a very recent time when it reported to the full committee.

"I have never seen a sub-committee that worked together in more perfect harmony. Everyone desired to draft a platform which would be commensurate with the great opportunities that lie before the party in this campaign.

"The sub-committee appointed still further committees among itself. We have almost completed a platform which will be submitted to this convention in a few hours.

"When you hear that platform you will realize the amount of labor and toil that has gone into it. You will be proud of that platform and you will regard it as a winning platform.

Six Hours' Sleep in Three Days.

"I am tired. My voice is worn. I have since Tuesday night literally not had more than six hours' sleep: I didn't get out of the committee until 6 this morning. I want you to understand there has been no delay on the part of the committee that could be avoided.

Disagree on Two Planks.

"We have had an unusually large number of important matters to deal with. We have dealt with all except two, in a manner which has won the unanimous support of the committee of 54 members. When we report this platform to you it will be a majority report on every plank, unanimously made except in two instances. In those two there has been difference of opinion. I would not be frank with you if I did not tell you what they are.

Majority Signs Report on League.

"There was a difference of opinion on the League of Nations. That debate although prolonged was amicable, and the majority report will carry with it the signatures of a majority.

Baker Heads Minority.

"A minority report will be pre-

Al Smith Certain He Will Win

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, June 28.—"On the eve of balloting I feel very much encouraged. I believe I will be nominated."

Governor Al Smith made this statement early today following conferences with Democratic leaders and delegates which lasted a great part of the night.

The governor planned to spend most of his time today at the Manhatton Club, just across the street from Madison Square Garden.

'Phone Taxes to Be Discontinued

Collection Of Federal Taxes On Telephone Toll Calls Will Be Discontinued July 2.—Considerable Saving To 'Phone Users.

In accordance with the Revenue Act of 1924, the New York Telephone Company has completed arrangements for discontinuing at midnight, standard time, on July 2nd when the Act becomes effective, the collection of the Federal Tax which has been imposed since April 1, 1919 on telephone toll calls and certain types of long distance equipment

The removal of this tax will mean a considerable saving to telephone users.

The 1919 Revenue Act placed a tax of five cents on all telephone messages for which the total charge is more than fourteen cents and not more than fifty cents. A tax of ten cents was levied on all mesasges for which the Telephone Company's rate is fifty cents or more. In addition the Act imposed a 10% tax on leased wire service and on extra telephone facilities used for long distance purposes.

The saving resulting from the repeal of the Revenue Act will be particularly noticeable on telephone calls for which the charge ranges between fifteen cents and one dollar, as the tax applied on such calls meant an added payment of from ten to twenty per cent.

MONDAY, LAST DAY TO CHANGE LICENSES

Within the last two days there has been a rush of automobile owners holding omnibus licenses to change them into passenger car licenses. Over one hundred have been changed at the motor vehicle department in the Ulster county clerk's office. Monday is the last day for making the change under the new automobile law which goes into effect on July 1.

THIEVES RANSACK HONE STREET HOUSE

Some time Thursday night or early Friday morning thieves ransacked the house of Jacob Sharpe, Jr., of No. 47 Hone street, but from what could be learned they secured nothing of value. Entrance to the house was made by removing a screen from a window. The thieves opened and ransacked closets and bureau drawers evidently searching for valuables.

BOY ACCIDENTALLY DROWNS AT ELLENVILLE.

Joseph Weiss, a city lad of 14 years, a brother-in-law of Mr. Markman of Granite, was drowned last Sunday afternoon while bathing in the Stonykill, near Ellenville. Coroner Humisten, after rendering a verdict of accidental drowning, issued a permit for the removal of the body to the city for interment.

THE BANK OF THRIFT AND SAFETY

POPULARITY OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

Shows Small Country Banks as Well as City Banks Strongly Favorable.

Assertions by some politicians that small banks generally are inimical to the Federal Reserve System were put to the test recently by a committee appointed by John D. Phillips, president of the State Bank Division of the American Bankers' Association by means of a questionnaire sent to 11,000 state banks. The result indicated that an overwhelming majority of them are, in fact, friendly to the System.

Two questions were put to the banks. The first was as follows:

"Do you believe that the Federal Reserve System has been beneficial to the agricultural, commercial and banking interests of the country and that it should be perpetuated?"

To this 4,934 replies were received. Of these 4,024 voted "yes" without qualification, and only 61 voted "no." Further answers still coming in when this tabulation was made indicated the same favorable trend.

The second question asked by Mr. Phillips' committee was:

"If your not being a member should contribute to the destruction of the System, would you join?"

While the great majority of the state banks are not members of the System, largely for technical reasons, the answers showed that the bulk of those non-members who are eligible to join would do so if such action were necessary to save the System. To his second question 2,876 have been recorded as voting "yes" and only 725 as "no." Many refrained from voting on this question because under the present rules they are ineligible for membership.

Some replies voiced certain criticisms of the System, but these universally dealt with details of administration or of the rules and not with the principles of the institution.

RECONSTRUCTION

A man came into a Nebraska bank in the spring of 1922 and asked for financial assistance. His statement prepared in the Service Department showed he was about bankrupt; that he owed $1,200 more than his equipment was worth. He had a farm rented for the year. Further credit had been refused him in his own bank and he was about ready to quit and apply the proceeds from the sale of his equipment to his debts.

The bank's Service Man went with him to his farm and after an examination decided that if the farmer had a half dozen cows and ten brood sows he would probably be able to use his pasture and intended corn crop to advantage. The bank finally loaned him $1,200 for this purpose and took a chattel mortgage on the stock purchased as its security. The bank admitted that ordinarily a loan should not be made like that, but the farm was close to town and the stock could readily be resold.

When the end of the year came around the exact records showed that the family had been well maintained and on half of the cream checks; the other half had been applied on his $660 note at the bank, covering the loan for the cows. Five days before the year was up the principal and interest on the note were entirely paid by crea mchecks. The pigs afforded a net gain of $1,400 after all expenses were paid.

In addition to this financial gain, the farmer was taught the value of a good cow and the necessity of keeping a record of his operations to know which farm operations are profitable. The Farm Service Department of the bank was able to teach this man things he had never dreamed about. It is worth the effort the banks would be called upon to make if each bank could but turn one broken, discouraged farmer into a prosperous one.—Banker-Farmer.

Russia's New Paradise

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

So little had been heard of the region along the northeast shore of the Black sea, until Sukhum Kaleh recently became a health resort for Russian officials, that it might be assumed always to have been a waste land. It constitutes an excellent example, however, of the fact that the thriving region of one age often is the neglected realm of another.

This was the famous Colchis of Greek days and more than 600 years before Christ, Meletus, then most powerful center of the Greek world, planted the city of Dioscurias on the site of the present Sukhum. The port and its neighborhood became of great importance, and in due time they were incorporated into the Roman and Byzantine empires. It was one of the greatest of Genoese trading stations in late Byzantine times; but with the coming of Turkish rule a blight fell that has never been wholly removed.

Though there is easy access to this strip of coast by water from Crimea and the Sea of Azov, Russia came into possession of the region late, and only after her control had been extended entirely around the east end of the Caucasus mountains and her armies had "marched through Georgia." The mountains were the allies of the Circassians and Abkhasians who lived along this shore. Here the towering Caucasus becomes a coast range, and its innumerable spurs that strike at right angles into the water cut the country up into a number of compartments.

The Crimea has been a delightful resort land for the Russians for generations, but the present development of the northeast coast of the Black sea is taking place because its climate and surroundings are really superior to those of the Crimean peninsula. The veranda of a villa in the new vacation paradise can command a magnificent view of the Black sea, deep forests, and lofty Mt. Elbruz, one-third of which is constantly covered with snow. The same mountains shelter the coast from the cold winter blasts from the north and east. As a result, though the district is in the latitude of Massachusetts, it has temperatures comparable to those of coast regions much farther south. The thermometer seldom approaches the freezing point in winter or rises much above 80 degrees in the summer.

Climate Is Delightful.

Sukhum Kaleh is one hundred miles north of Batum at the eastern end of the Black sea and is the only good port between Batum and the Sea of Azov. Mountaineers, accustomed to their frosty heights, shun the city, fearing malaria, for the torrential streams have all built small marshes about their mouths. But the foothills of the Caucasus, a background splashed against the sky with giant strokes, afford one of the most delightful climates in the world. It is natural that Russians make this district their vacation capital since the Caucasus is the only great mountain range in all soviet land and presents a striking relief to the flat but fruitful plains. A famous Alpine guide who went to the Caucasus by rail, exasperated by endless horizontal lines in the Ukraine, finally broke out saying it was no use to go farther hunting for mountains since it was hourly becoming more evident that the world was truly flat.

Though the Caucasus mountains as a whole are barren, gaunt, rugged to a fault, the western strip along the Black sea is clothed heavily with forests and almost tropical undergrowth. Warm winds sweeping eastward are robbed of moisture by the mountain ridge. What arid Turkestan loses, Circassia and Abkhasia use to grow Circassian walnut trees for beautiful furniture. Observers report the Caucasus forests remarkable for their variety; in addition to walnut there are oak, beech, pine, and many other varieties growing side by side. One enthusiast declares plums and pears almost drop in the traveler's mouth as he rides down the Kodor valley. Strawberries, raspberries and currants abound in the glens.

Botanists have found in this mountain retreat survivors of the vegetable world when the earth was young. Common plants, which ordinarily attain a height of one or two feet, become giants five or six feet tall. Mountainsides are great bouquets. There are great yellow scabious flowers, azure columbines and crimson blooms like Alpine snake-weed. Beneath these gaudy canopies are found shade-loving blooms, geraniums, orchids, forget-me-nots, violets, jasmines, rhododendrons. Thickets of box cover much of seaward slope.

Origin of the People Unknown.

The Abkhasians, or the remnant of them, who inhabit this Caucasian paradise, are a race which seems to have no ties with the historical world. Ethnologists are said to have worked on the problem of their origin in vain. Like northerners they are tall, fair-complexioned, blue-eyed, have auburn hair and love sports and athletics. Yet they have an oriental regularity of feature. Other similarities ally them to Semitic races, and some students have gone so far as to see in them a strain from old Egyptian colonists. They have no written language. Their fruitful mountain slopes provide an easy living and not seldom an adventurer in the hills is reminded of old Greek idyls as he comes upon a picturesque shepherd tending his flock, grazing in infinite peace on a solitary mountain meadow.

The Abkhasians of the coast were the Vikings of the Black sea before that body of water came under Russian dominion. In their long galleys holding 100 to 800 men they raided the coasts of the Crimea, Anatolia, and even European Turkey. After Russian ships plied the sea these marine forays had to be given up. Then in 1838 the Muscovite forces came to the isolated northeast coast itself and the land became Russian territory. The Abkhasians were not happy under the Russian yoke and thousands of them moved into Turkey. When Turkey was at war with Russia in 1877, the Abkhasians helped the invading Turkish armies, and when the Russians won the war, 30,000 of them emigrated in a body to Asiatic and European Turkey. The region was almost depopulated by this movement and has remained largely unoccupied since. The old inhabitants were forest lovers, practicing their religious rites among the trees and holding the oak sacred as did the Druids. Offerings were hung to the branches, and even some of the dead were disposed of in this way.

He who searches in the forests, among the undergrowth, and even beneath the sea, will find many evidences of the past north of this fringe of coast land. During the Roman regime there was a highway along the coast and a few of the milestones are still standing, though all traces of the road have disappeared. To the natives of today these staunch reminders of a past civilization are merely "fairy altars."

Ruins of Greek City.

Changes in the level of the shore line have helped to obliterate marks of the past. At Sukhum ruins of the old Greek city of Dioscurias can be seen under the waters of the harbor. The very sands are filled with evidences of a past civilization, and after severe storms old coins, rings and various other objects have been found on the beach.

Herodotus knew the Caucasus for the highest mountains with which the civilized world was acquainted. He reported that the people lived on fruit, and so they do to a great extent, even today. Leaves for making fast dye were obtained in the forests, he wrote, and the people were insensible to laws of decency or morality. To the Black sea shore of the Caucus came Jason in his tiny ship in search of the golden fleece. Perhaps the "golden fleece" was merely an excuse, a "business trip," which would permit him to spend a summer at what the world has rediscovered as an attractive vacation resort.

Prometheus was bound by the gods to the frozen flanks of Elbruz, legend has it. He was the god of fire and cultural progress, a friend of man, and it was for frustrating acts of despotic deities that he was chained to the highest peak in Europe.

Elbruz is constantly topped "with kingly ermine snow," but visitors say it does not compare in majesty to many other famous peaks. Like Mt. Rainier, Elbruz is a volcanic cone. Many peaks of the Caucasian barrier were once volcanoes spewing lava. Though it is the highest mountain in Europe, its 18,470 feet are exceeded by Alaskan peaks, many in South America and a few in Africa and Asia.

A quick way to see the northeast coast at its best is to sail in a coasting steamer from Batum to Novorostisk The vessel is in sight of land all the way, and from its deck the rugged coast-line with its background of peaks stands out in all its grandeur. Often the tops of the range are shrouded in clouds, but from time to time the veil shifts and discloses sparklingly white peaks.

Wood That Won't Float

As a general proposition that statement that wood floats will be generally accepted without question or qualification, but as a matter of fact there are several woods that are heavier than water and invariably sink in water.

One of them is the "mancano" wood of the Philippines—unknown to us until recently, but which, it is hoped, will serve as a substitute for the costly lignum vitae.

Lignum vitae is the wood of a tree native to the American tropics. Some of the best of it comes from Cuba. Its name, meaning "wood of life," was bestowed upon it by the early Spaniards, among whom a belief arose it possessed almost miraculous properties as a cure for various diseases.

Famous Hampton Court

Hampton Court palace, built by Cardinal Wolsey, is probably the finest of all the old English palaces. It is up the river about fifteen miles from Waterloo. It is of red brick, softened by time, and contains 1,000 apartments. It is rich in story. The ghost of the murdered Catherine Howard walks there. There is a haunted gallery, a maze in the beautiful gardens and a park of over 1,000 acres. Most of the apartments are occupied by royal pensioners, like the mother of Warneford, who brought down the first Zeppelin. George II was the last sovereign to use Hampton court.

Wind Watch in Morning

Harry Holton, a watchmaker of Wells River, Vt., has kept a record of watch-spring breakages for a number of years and he has found that 70 out of 75 mainspring breaks occur at night. This is due, he says, to the watch having been warmed by the body all day and when removed at night and wound tight, ensuing contraction causes strain when the spring cools.

Move Old Windmill

A century-old windmill has been moved in sections from its old site near Aldeburgh, England, to another three miles inland, where it is being re-erected. It will be used to pump water into a storage tank with a capacity of 20,000 gallons, which is in course of construction.

Leather Made Cheaper

Comparatively speaking, leather is the cheapest basic commodity in the country today. Improvements in processes of finishing leather and the introduction of machinery and the exercise of conservation and utilization in by-products has saved the public millions of dollars.

Fifty Teachers Win Scholarships Offered In National Competition For Promotion of Health Education

Fifty progressive elementary school teachers from as many cities will spend the summer or the next school year in studying health instruction for school children, each aided by a scholarship of $500 won in the health teaching contest conducted by the American Child Health Association.

These teachers were awarded the scholarships in competition with more than sixteen hundred elementary teachers who were judged on the health instruction and correctional work they accomplished with their classes from December 1, 1923 to May 15, 1924.

The $25,000 for the scholarships was provided by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Dr. Lee K. Frankel, head of the company's welfare work, pointed out that it was of vital importance to teach proper health habits to children. He said the best methods for doing this were being developed by individual teachers but still remained virtually hidden away from the great mass of teachers. The purpose of the contest is to reveal these methods as well as to give those who are doing the best work an opportunity for special study at accredited universities to make them even more effective.

Educational authorities, who have reviewed the reports of the work of the winning teachers and of those who received honorable mention, expressed great enthusiasm for their high quality. Many of the reports, they declared, were equal in value to a thesis earning a Ph. D degree.

The effectiveness of the competing teachers work was measured by the following standards.

1. Healthier children as judged by improvement in growth attested by height-weight records; and by removal of physical handicaps.
2. Healthier children, as judged by right attitudes, and sound knowledge, as evidenced in good health habits and practices.
3. Sound teaching methods as evidenced in teacher's plans, illustrated by children's work.

DANGERS OF DICTATORSHIP.

Italy is furnishing another illustration that dictatorships, however great their apparent popular support, are likely to bring about their own downfall through abuse of power. The Mussolini government was regarded as one of the strongest in Europe. Premier Mussolini has been referred to as the "iron man of Italy." His Fascisti followers appeared to be in absolute control of the country. But great power seemed to have dulled their respect for the laws, for they are suspected of kidnapping and perhaps murdering a member of the chamber of deputies who was antagonistic to their cause. Even the suspicion has brought such a revulsion of public feeling in Italy as to threaten the existence of the Mussolini regime.

The United States went through a somewhat similar experience a few years ago. The excesses of the Democratic Administration did not extend to kidnapping and murder, but they ran the gamut of extravagance, inefficiency, and gross perversion of constitutional authority. The big majorities that put President Wilson in office were reversed, and Harding and Coolidge were elected by 7,000,000 votes, the greatest majority in the history of American elections. The people learned their lesson in those eight years of Democratic misrule, and have no desire to put themselves again under a dictator's commands.

TRADE CONDITIONS.

Once more the Democrats are proven to be poor judges of economic principles and conditions. Trade statistics for the ten months ending April 30, the latest statistics available, show that for that ten months period we had a favorable trade balance amounting to $692,000,000. All through the discussion of the Republican tariff bill the Democrats were declaring that enactment of such a measure would destroy our foreign trade. Particularly we were told that it would destroy our export trade. for so the Democrats warned us, if we would not give foreigners access to our markets they would cease to buy from us.

The records of imports and exports show that in the ten months ending April, 1924, we imported goods to the value of $2,977,000,000, exported goods to the value of $3,669,000,000, leaving a net balance of exports to the amount of $692,000,000, as stated above. In the corresponding period ending in April, 1923, we imported goods to the total value of $3,008,000,000, and exported goods to the value of $3,320,000,000, leaving a net export excess to the amount of $232,000,000.

For the ten months ending April, this year, as compared with the ten months ending in April, 1923, our favorable trade balance shows an improvement of $460,000,000.

That is not such a bad showing in view of the Democratic prediction that our foreign trade would be ruined by the enactment of a Republican tariff law.

HOW AMERICA HELPED HAITI.

A treaty with the Dominican Republic has been concluded whereby American marines will be withdrawn from that country. The situation in the eastern half of the island of Haiti was similar to that in the western half controlled by the Republic of Haiti. Robber bands infested the whole island, and the governments of both nations were dictated by interests that sought only to exploit the island for personal profit. Civil war was chronic and there was no safety for either property or life. The United States stepped into the situation and affairs of both countries were put in charge of a United States Naval officer, with marines stationed throughout the island to preserve order.

That interference in Haiti and the Dominican Republic has been a subject of bitter criticism from Democrats. But the tremendous improvement in the condition of the inhabitants since American occupation refutes the Democratic argument. The bandits have been rounded up, the financial affairs of the island have been put on a sound basis, roads, harbors, and other much needed public improvements have been constructed, and governments have been chosen by a fair vote of the people. Never before have the citizens of the two republics been so prosperous and contented. Some months ago the American marines were withdrawn from the Republic of Haiti, and now a similar withdrawal will take place in the Dominican Republic. There is no greater proof of American altruism under Republican direction than the record of American occupation in the island of Haiti.

SUNBURN.

You will be getting away on a vacation when the midsummer months arrive, and one of your worries may be the matter of sunburn.

As you know the acquiring of a coat of tan is considered a part of the vacation, and you might feel yourself cheated if you didn't get your share. Yet you have friends who go out into the sun and actually invite a real sunburn and are scarcely reddened.

Now why is this?

Well, there are rays in the sun that actually cause a chemical action on the skin, just as do the X-Rays, or the rays from radium.

It is these same rays which reflected off the snow in Arctic regions that cause snow blindness, and the inflammation of the eyes in the tropics from the glare of the sun.

After the rays have acted upon the skin the parts exposed become very red, hot, and often swollen. A severe blistering often occurs, and the smarting is most intense.

When this fades away, as it does in a short time, the skin peels off and the skin becomes darker.

Now this darkening of the skin is Nature's way of preventing further burning.

One who is exposed to the sun's rays all the time acquires a coat of "tan" and thereafter is not bothered with sunburn.

You get a coat of tan in the summer which gradually wears away during the winter and spring, and so you are ready for a fresh burning the following summer.

It would appear then, that at some previous time your friend or his ancestors must have acquired a "tanning" that the skin has developed so much coloring matter that the sun does not have much effect upon it.

If you burn easily it might be well to wear a good wide hat, or to cover your face, hands and arms with an ointment with some coloring matter in it, such as iodine.

The application of tinted face powders is of help.

If you are already burned and want relief there is really nothing better than the old fashioned baking soda.

A few handfuls thrown into a basin of water and the plunging of the face and arms therein, is very soothing and helps the healing materially.

It is unfortunate that you and I must live our lives so much indoors.

The real value of the sun's rays not only to the skin itself but to the entire body has been actually proven.

The oxygen in the blood increased about twenty-five per cent, in one who was removed from a dark room to the sunlight.

Kingston Savings Bank 50 Years Old

miration has been bestowed upon the present building during its nearly twenty-five years of existence. It was designed by Messrs Ingle and Almirall, architects, of New York city, and was erected by Messrs Sullivan & Badgley of Binghamton, N. Y.

In the creation of the present bank building, the architects' aim was to produce "a modern adaptation of classic forms, with a view to render as closely as possible an adequate and distinct idea of the building's purpose." In that purpose, they succeeded admirably.

The underlying principle in the design of the whole structure has been to give expression to the purposes for which the building was erected. Nobody would ever mistake it for anything except a bank.

The construction is entirely on fireproof lines, wood being used only in trim and counter screen.

The Ionic columns, portico, arches, cornice, window openings, screen with iron grilles, mouldings, slate dome with copper cupola, are all of a severity which is extremely pleasing because they carry out the idea of firmness and solidity, which the nature of the institution itself implies.

First Day's Depositors.

It is a coincidence that the foreman in charge of the construction of the present bank building should have been one of the depositors on the day on which the bank first opened for business—June 29, 1874. He was Melvin Freer.

There were nineteen depositors on that historic day, and in the order in which they came to the bank and pass books were issued to or for them, they were:

Augustus O. Abbey
Margaret S. Finch
George B. Styles
Millie S. Finger
John R. Freer
Alonzo J. Freer
Melvin S. Freer
Benjamin S. Freer
Jacob Bernstein
Flora Bernstein
Charles H. Clearwater
Matilda G. Fredenburgh
William H. Fredenburgh
W. Whiting Fredenburgh
Walter S. Fredenburgh
James H. VanDemark
Silas Wood
Henry D. Baldwin
Johannes Bruyn

Growing Ten Thousand Times.

The total deposits that day were $611. There were three deposits of $100 each, three of $50 each, three of $25 each, one of $15, six of $10 each, two of $5 each, and one of $1.

The total resources of the Kingston Savings Bank as shown by the last published statement of January 1, 1924, amount to $6,715,206.44, which represent more than ten thousand times the amount of the first day's deposits fifty years ago.

The resources of the bank exceeded the amount due depositors, including interest at four per cent, on that date, by the sum of $621,689.66. The surplus represents the amount which is set aside by a savings bank as required by law as a guaranty fund against depreciation, and earnings in excess of expenses and the interest paid to depositors. The surplus is continually earning interest for the depositors.

The Resources.

How the resources of the bank are made up is shown by the following statement as of the date mentioned, statements being prepared semi-annually after the bank has been examined by the New York State Banking Department:

Bonds and mortgages,	$3,677,055.00
Bonds (market value),	2,640,108.08
Banking house	25,000.00
Accrued interest	99,766.12
Cash in bank	261,832.91
Cash on hand	9,825.49
Other assets	1,618.84
Total	$6,715,206.44

The Liabilities.

The liabilities of the bank on the same date were:

Due depositors, including interest at 4% to date	$6,093,516.78
Surplus (market value)	621,689.66
Total	$6,715,206.44

Importance of Surplus.

The value of the surplus becomes apparent when it is remembered that a saving bank is a mutual institution, that there is no stock ownership, but that the bank and all its assets are owned by the depositors.

Sun's Strange Rotation

The sun does not rotate like a solid body, all parts of which move together. A spot near the equator completes a rotation (if it exists so long) in about 25 days, while one at 45 latitude takes about two and a half days longer to return to the central meridian. Nearer the poles the rotation period is still longer.—George Ellery Haye in "Sun-Spots as Magnets."

Meaning of Caliph

Caliph, the high-sounding title which has been officially abolished in Turkey, means "a successor," and was first adopted by the father of the prophet's wife, Ayesha, who became the second ruler of Islam.

AFE AND SANE USE OF THE TRIPLE SOCKET FOR ELECTRICAL DEVICES

vent Overloading and Fuse and Wire Troubles by Knowing How Much Current is Needed.

unday summer mornings mean eakfast on the porch and that in s means breakfast cooked elecally. Because few sun porches equipped with convenience outs, the percolator or toaster or fle iron must be connected to the p socket, and this naturally ds up operations, allowing only ne thing to be cooked at a time. In der to facilitate matters a plural riple socket may be attached.

When connecting a double or iple socket to the lamp socket exsion, one must bear in mind that e amount of current that can be wn from the socket has not been creased threefold. The available rrent is just the same as it was fore. The advantage is in being le to attach three "light" loads to e single socket instead of a single avy one."

While the fuse plugs in the elecal circuit entering the house will otect against overload of the enre system, they may not prevent e overloading of a single socket, injuring the switch and finally doing possible injury to the wiring itlf.

It is therefore advisable for the usekeeper to become acquainted th the "current demands" of her pliances, so that she may avoid ther the inconvenience of blowing fuse or the immediate or final inry of the socket and connections.

What's a Watt—And How Many Of Them?

From the standpoint of "overloading" and the size of the month's electrical bill the various devices we attach to convenience outlets in wall and baseboard and to lamp sockets may be divided into two readily distinguishable classes—one the "motor" type and the other the "heater." Washing machines, suction cleaners, automatic refrigerators, fans and heaters are examples of the motor class. (Any appliance which depends for its operation upon an electric motor is grouped with this type of load.) On the other hand, the heater load is represented by such articles as the iron, toaster, grill and percolater.

The mysterious "watt" is the unit of measure of the electrical energy consumed by the light bulb or appliances and your meter records "kilowatt hours" or the thousands of watts consumed, multiplied by the hours of use.

The average current demand of heater class of appliance is much greater than that for the motor type. For example, the wattage taken by one electric iron would run three full grown washing machines, or over twice that many large electric fans. If you were using a plural socket in order to connect more than one appliance to a current source it would be very much better to attach a combination of motor and heater types such as a fan and an iron to the same socket and the other heater appliance to a separate source rather than to put the two heated appliances on the plural socket. During breakfast a grill and percolator form a desirable combination, but add to this a toaster—all at one point—and the load is over twice the rated capacity of the average socket.

Attention to Wiring.

The modern house should, of course, be adequately wired and furnished with convenience outlets for appliance attachment, but in case the wiring is not modern and there is a scarcity of current sources, a little study of load division between the sockets will be of considerable value. Acquaintance with the wattage demands of the various appliances will alslo be of assistance in exercising economy and insuring safety.

When one realizes that the small hall light costs in the neighborhood of a quarter of a cent an hour for its operation and the electric iron about twenty-five times more, attention will be given to cutting down in ironing time rather than the time the hall light burns. You must also realize that it costs at least a dozen times as much to warm the room up in the winter time with an electric glow heater than it does to cool it off in the summer with an electric fan. Unless you know what your different electric servants cost, you are apt to scrimp in the wong quarter. "Save at the spigot and let fly at the bung hole," as the old pre-prohibition adage has it.

Typical Motor Demands:

Refrigerators	265 Watts
Floor machines	235 Watts
Washing machines	225 Watts
Suction cleaners	145 Watts
Ironing machines	120 Watts
Mixing machines	120 Watts
Hand beaters	65 Watts
Fans	60 Watts

Typical Heater Demands:

Irons	600 Watts
Grills	620 Watts
Glow Heaters	600 Watts
Toasters	550 Watts
Percolators	300 Watts
Immersion water heaters	450 Watts
Curling irons	130 Watts
Heating pad	60 Watts
Electric light	50 Watts

MODERN LIGHTING FIXTURES TRACED TO OLD ROMAN LIFE

Theme Of Decorative Effects Taken From Art of Ancient Race.

Where the old temple bells ring, and where the pagodas dotted the way from one shrine to another, there, too, the lanterns swung in the warm air, and the lantern bearing standards marked the routes over stream and through garden. And then there were the Feasts of the Lanterns and many other aspects of the bearers of light of which the Occident in its smug sophistication has not the least conception.

Today we are being awakened from our artistic lethargy by the manufacturers of the modern lighting fixture. He has studied the art of the ancient Greeks and Romans and from old tombs and temples brought to light the graceful oil-holding vessels, copied these, in place of the wick inserted a delicately twisted glass bulb in simulation of a flame—he has even colored this light in the rich amber and gold tones of flame—and today we have charming lamps for hallway and bedroom and living room that remind us of the lamps that the vestal virgins carried in their sacred rites From the tombs of the Pharaohs the modern artisan has found lamps which we use in so many rooms of the private home and the public building. If in choosing a lamp we would attempt to select only those which have an obviously ancient derivation (an ancestor who has come down to us in history, so to speak) our homes would be spared more of those hideous makeshifts.

That's Different

A sophisticated age is one that calls it ignorance instead of innocence.—Duluth Herald.

A VETERAN HOUSEWIFE REVIEWS SOME ESSENTIALS OF A GOOD KITCHEN

Declares It Is a Delight to Cook if the Kitchen Is Right.

"The time is past when the housewife will boast of her ignorance of details of semi-technical nature pertaining to the home. She must dispell the fog which lies before such daily, commonplace things as correct and adequate illumination, selection and cooking of food, cleaning, refrigeration, infant-care and the hundred and one other tasks which make her life-work as interesting and perhaps more important than that followed by the majority of business women—the novelist, the engineer, the scientist or other so-called 'romantic' occupations.

"When I first took over my kitchen it was lighted by an adapted gas and electric fixture, such as is found in a multitude of homes today. There were no glass shades, and until my attention was directed to the poor lighting, I took little notice of the bare, white-hot filament of the incandescent lamp which was alternately blinding me with glare, or throwing a dense shadow on my work.

"The remedy was simple. I took advantage of an offer made by the electrical people in my town to replace the unsatisfactory fixture with a modern, perfected, kitchen lighting unit, consisting of a neat white glass bowl, which entirely enclosed the electric lamp. This was mounted close to the ceiling and produced a wonderful glow which made my kitchen as light as day. The effect of this change was that I instantly saw that my kitchen was not clean—that the corners and working surfaces had need of more soap, water and elbow grease.

"I also saw that my walls, the ceiling and other surfaces really required a new coat of paint or enamel and I saw to it that this was done in a light cream and white which made it impossible to overlook uncleanliness. Other improvements followed, until today my kitchen is my pride, and I frankly admit, without even an apology for saying so, that I love kitchen work!"

The veteran housewife quoted, has discovered the main issue in proper kitchen management. Have plenty of good light and you will readily see the defects which make kitchen duties so onerous and hard to most women. For without adequate illumination it is impossible to get satisfactory results in a kitchen even though it may be modern in all other respects.

FRESH FRUITS AND VEGETABLES ADD ZEST TO HOT WEATHER MEALS

Crisp Salads, Cooling and Healthful, Takes the Place of Heavy Meat Dishes.

What a joy it is after a long hot day, to come home to a cool, dim house, to bathe and don fresh clothing and to sit down to an appetizing well-cooked meal.

Foods that are minus fat in any quantity are the most advisable as well as the most desirable for summer eating, and there is no music to equal the tinkle of ice in a tall frosted glass of amber Oolong or golden-brown Java. Eschew hot drinks and heavy foods and you will find less reason to exclaim frequently and breathlessly, "It isn't the heat, it's the humidity!"

A delightfully cooling concoction is known as "Salad Piquant" and is made of one small head of lettuce, a medium-sized cucumber, four tablespoonfuls cream, ½ teaspoonful white pepper, 1 small cream cheese, ½ teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls lemon-juice, one teaspoonful powdered sugar, six kumquats and ¼ teaspoonful paprika.

Pare and slice the cucumber thinly and cover with cold, salted water. Let stand in a cold place one hour. Drain and dry thoroughly. Thin the cream cheese with the cream; add the salt, white pepper, paprika, powdered sugar and lemon juice. Arrange the lettuce leaves on salad plates, put the cucumber slices into the cheese dressing and apportion to each plate, spreading well over the lettuce nests. Then cut the kumquats in very thin slices and scatter them over the salad, allowing one kumquat for each serving. Served as a dinner salad with the meat course, or alone with crisp crackers, or cold meats for luncheon, it is a cool, satisfying and extremely decorative salad. Do not add any further dressing.

June Salad—Cooked asparagus stalks, cooked green peas, cooked diced carrots, finely minced parsley, canned pimentos, French dressing, mayonnaise, lettuce.

Arrange the lettuce on a salad plate. Radiate asparagus stalks towards the edge, leaving a space in the center for a mound of the green peas. Surround with a ring of the diced carrots. Sprinkle carefully with French dressing, pipe thick mayonnaise in rings around both vegetables, and put a whirl in the center, in which stand a few small leaves of white lettuce. Sprinkle ...ts with minced parsley, and the peas and asparagus with pimentos cut in small dice. Chives may be used, if desired.

Country Salad—2 cupfuls chopped cooked meat, 4 diced cooked potatoes (large), 1 cupful cooked sliced carrots, 3 hard-cooked eggs, boiled dressing, lettuce, 3 small gherkins, 1 cupful diced celery.

Combine the chopped, cooked meat which may be corned beef, tongue or ham with sufficient boiled dressing to mold. Pack in a cold mold and chill. Likewise, thoroughly chill the cooked potatoes and carrots. Let the diced celery stand in cold water to which a little lemon-juice has been added. When ready to serve, line the salad dish with lettuce, unmold the meat in the center and arrange the potatoes tossed in boiled dressing around it. Place the border of carrots around the potatoes, then the celery drained and wiped dry. Chop the whites of the hard cooked eggs and sprinkle over

Electric Fans For Odd Jobs

The first electric fans were used in New York City in 1884. They were crude affairs and without guards. Also, they rented for $15.00 for the summer season, more than the cost of a modern fan of ordinary size.

In the forty years there have been designed many special types of fans for hundreds of purposes, from the twenty foot fan that creates a gale of wind in a tunnel to test air planes to the tiny enameled bedroom fan whose cooling breezes bring comfort and joy.

The extensive use of electric fans in the home has developed some ingenious applications. Here are just a few:

To dry freshly painted furniture and varnished floors.

To hasten the drying of laundry on rainy wash days.

To dry hair.

To keep flies away from the dining room table.

To dehydrate fruits and vegetables.

To aerate the refrigerator after it has been scrubbed.

To dry kodak films.

For the everyday purpose of supplying fresh air, experts recommend that the electric fan be placed on the floor facing away from the window, which should be opened both top and bottom. The hot air is driven out at the top and the fresh air comes in below to circulate around the room.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

THE ASPARAGUS BED

The asparagus bed demanded more attention and more time than any other bed in the garden.

Of course the others had to be looked after and the weeds pulled out of the way and the beans and the potatoes all liked to be hoed around about themselves.

But the asparagus bed was very fussy.

It liked so much attention.

Yet it did not give as much asparagus as the other vegtables gave of themselves. It gave enough so that the different members of the family in turn had a dish of asparagus but as for the whole family having it at one time—no, no, the asparagus bed did not allow that.

Perhaps in some places it was different but here the asparagus bed loved the attention and loved the fussing and did not want to spoil the family.

Perhaps the asparagus wanted to be sure the family never got tired of asparagus.

And they certainly never had the chance to get tired of it, with only one dish of it at a time.

It was a rule in the family that no one must take nor receive from the one whose turn it was to have asparagus a single stalk of it.

Only One Dish of It at a Time.

There was a rule about this. And no one felt envious of the one whose turn it was for that was the rule and it was a fair rule.

How thrilled the family were when they saw more asparagus each time and knew that yet another turn would come around.

But one day, out in the garden, when the family were all at dinner, the vegetables all started talking.

"I'd be ashamed if I were you, asparagus," said the potato leader. "We're not like that."

"No," said the asparagus, "and so you're never a treat. You're just good, wholesome potatoes.

"You're not unusual. You're not a delicacy. You spoil the people, that's what you do."

"I suppose you think we do the same," said a carrot.

"Of course I do," answered the asparagus. "You let yourself become so common that they put you in stew. They don't put the members of our family in a stew!

"And as for the radishes—growing up in different crops and the lettuce too—well really, you just spoil the people beyond all words.

"Even the cucumbers and the tomatoes will do the same.

"And there are the beans and the peas—well we'd never act like that."

"It's true they never would," said the potatoes. "Maybe we do let ourselves become common."

"And maybe we do, too," said the carrots.

"Maybe we do, also," said the beans.

"And the same may be true of us," said the peas.

But later on the family were out in the garden and they said:

"It will be several days before we can get another dish out of that asparagus bed and the asparagus is so good.

"But while it's a luxury it is our other vegetables really which feed us and give us strength. They're the vegetables to stand by us."

And the other vegetables all felt better, for there was something steady and reliable and friendly and nice about not being too superior.

But the asparagus bed kept its own ways and perhaps that was a good thing, for it wouldn't be so nice if everything became too usual and nothing could be a treat.

ABOUT UNCOOKED FOODS

The raw faddist didn't know why raw food seemed to be so healthful; but he knew he could cure anything that flesh was heir to with raw foods. Today we know that many raw foods, such as greens of all kinds, cabbage, carrots and turnips contain life-giving substances called vitamines, which are (if eaten uncooked, not lost in the water of cooking or destroyed by heat) most valuable in keeping the body in good health.

One doesn't object to raw cabbage, carrots, lettuce, water cress and an occasional turnip, but one hesitates to eat uncooked beets or potatoes; in fact, they will need to be well-masked in good rich salad dressing to be very popular with the masses.

Another point which the raw food supporters will tell us is we all eat too much, which we know, and that, when eating raw foods, one feels satisfied with a much smaller amount of food. Thus we may save food and money by being a raw food eater.

We are told also that every bit of such food is assimilated; you find yourself feeling good after the meal, brain clear, wits nimble, and when retiring time comes, sleep like the proverbial log. There is really something worth while in this; it is at least worth a trial.

Cabbage Salad.—Take a hard, crisp head of cabbage, chop fine—or better, shred very fine; add salt and a few spoonfuls of sugar, a generous amount of thick, sweet cream to moisten, a dash of vinegar; mix well, and enjoy a most appetizing salad.

A dessert of a handful of dates and nuts will be easy to prepare and serve, and to the busy housewife who has everything to do—a great comfort. These foods are no more expensive, when time and material are counted, than many of the so-called simple desserts.

I'm tired of shootin' crackers, tired of all the fuss an' noise; fer added years have changed my taste from what a kid enjoys. It ain't a lack of patriotism that makes me feel this way but merely that I'm fed up on excitement, you might say. The town board has decided that we'll have a celebration on July Fourth an' even now they're makin' preparation. I 'spose they'll hav a big parade, an' speakers by the score, the same as they've been doin' fer the last ten years er more. I reckon I could tell you now what some of them will say, I've heard their line so often on this Independence Day. I'll show my independence on the Fourth, believe you me fer I've picked out a grassy bank beneath a shady tree. Away from all disturbance in a manner safe an' sane I'll celebrate the birthday of the nation an' obtain my full share of enjoyment. What more could a feller wish than just a quiet little stream, a shady spot and—fish? What more? Well 'course you know I always take my set along an' after baitin' up my hook I'll tune in on a song er mebbe somethin' that would have a patriotic brand like "Stars and Stripes Forever" by a military band. While speakers talk Preparedness, I'm prepared to fish er lissen an' anglin' after fish er news there ain't no chance of missin' either one, first come first served. I wouldn't ask fer more a little speckled beauty er th' latest baseball score.—Copyright, 1924, Westinghouse Eletcric & Manufacturing Co.

WILLOW.

Willow, June 27.—On the evening of July 4th at 6 o'clock, daylight saving time, the ladies of the Willow M. E. Church will serve another one of their already famous suppers. The affair will take place at the new church hall situated on the church grounds at Willow. The menu has not as yet been made public and the promise of the ladies that it will be up to the usual standard is surely as good an advertisement as they can get. Following the supper arrangements have been made for the usual social time and there will be a display of fireworks as a climax of the evening. To Herbert Carl of Kingston goes the credit for this donation. The ladies are preparing for a big crowd to come help their cause and at the same time spend a "safe and sane Fourth" in one of the Catskills' most beautiful valleys.

On the evening of June 24th Mr. and Mrs. A. Hogemeyer of New York city entertained Mr. and Mrs. John Martin, the Misses Ella and Nellie Martin, Captain and Mrs. Harry T. Blythe and Mr. and Mrs. M. Georgi at their summer home here. Willow welcomes the Hogemeyer family as one of the most popular of the summer colony.

Mr. and Mrs. C. T. McKenzie have opened Fern Brook for the summer.

Harry Martin is spending a few days in New York city.

Mr. and Mrs. B. V. Bishop and their daughter, formerly the popular Miss Willie Bell Bishop, are at their new summer home for the season.

NEURITIS IS NEEDLESS!

Health Talk

By Froude & MacKinnon, D's.C.

Neuritis is often associated with rheumatism, but more nearly resembles neuralgia. Strictly speaking, it is inflammation of one or more nerves.

Like Neuralgia, when a single nerve is affected, it may be caused by local pressure upon the spinal nerve reaching the seat of pain.

Multiple neuritis, affecting several nerves, is usually found to result from pressure at the atlas, or top joint of the spine.

By our chiropractic health method, spinal adjustments remove the pressure on the nerve, and normal transmission of vital energy over the affected nerve is resumed. The inflammation then subsides, and the process of repair begins.

Eventually the nerve is restored to normal, and the pain disappears.

CHRONIC TROUBLE IN ALL MACHINES

Same Make and Model Develops Peculiar Ailments When Not Given Care.

(By ERWIN GREER, President Greer College of Automotive Engineering, Chicago).

The sensible motor car owner is satisfied if his car gives a reasonable performance. If the fan belt breaks, he puts on a new one. If a washer leaks in the rear axle and the axle begins to throw grease, he cleans out the grease on the brake bands, puts in a new washer and then tries driving more in the center of the road. Driving to the right—continually—tilts the axle housing to the right and works the grease out a lot sooner than it would otherwise. And he doesn't howl about it, realising that it was his own fault for driving to the extreme right.

Chronic Trouble of Cars.

Every car has some sort of chronic trouble. Even the same make and model of car is capable of developing varied troubles. It is common to hear a motorist say, "She always did that," "Or that never did work properly." And such comments are as readily made about the $8,000 machine as the $900 one. But the big reason why complaints are confined to a certain class of drivers is because the other class of driver knows that a car needs constant attention, and gives it.

I know a fellow who is continually bewailing the fact that one of the ignition wires was always dropping off a spark plug. Instead of inserting a new fastener at the end of the cable he chose to sit back and yell about it. Meanwhile the car runs on three or four cylinders, depending upon how effectually he swears. The car is mechanically perfect outside of this small defect and six cents would remedy that. But to hear him talk you'd think that the machine was a veritable wreck.

Nothing Goes Wrong.

I invited this same chap to take a ride in my car, which is an expensive make. "This is the sort of car for me!" he exclaimed, as we glided down Michigan boulevard. "Nothing ever goes wrong with this make of car."

But just then he beheld my chauffeur acting exactly the same as he had acted the day before. "Blast it!" the chauffeur exclaimed. "The horn is out of order!"

There you are, folks. Half the automobile drivers are to blame—not the machines. Give your machine reasonable attention and care. And always remember that the car owner who appears to have a "regular car" is the fellow who, nine times out of ten, knows how to take care of it—or has learned to be satisfied with what he has.

Drainage of Crank Case Is Highly Important

Because of the accumulation of water in the crank case, frequent changing of the engine oil is highly important.

Water does not collect in the crank case because of leaks in the water jacket or through any occult means; it is simply a product of combustion which works down past the piston rings in the form of steam and condenses in the case. In some cars water actually drips from the muffler tailpiece, and in nearly all cars steam is visible in the exhaust on cold days, but this is only a small part of the water produced in the engine itself. Samples taken in a series of tests showed as much as three pints of water in a seven-quart crank case. Badly-worn parts result from the continued use of such a liquid. To avoid the expense or refinishing cylinder bores, refitting pistons, rings and bearings, the crank case oil should be changed at no greater intervals than every 1,000 miles, and preferably once in 500 miles.

Intelligent Braking Will Save All Tires

When you consider that in railroading the so-called "flat wheel" is produced by too sudden braking, you will be able to appreciate the effect which a similar practice must have on the rubber tires of a motorcar.

The best method of using the brakes is that which applies pressure on them so gradually that the forward movement of the car and the rotation of the wheels are stopped at the same time.

Nothing is more severe on the car than the spectacular stopping often indulged in by ignorant drivers in an effort to "show off."

The careful driver shuts his power off before he reaches the stopping point and permits the car to carry him along on its momentum, bringing it, with a gradual application of the brakes, to a halt at the exact spot he desires.

point is split in two directions, northbound traffic taking one side of the drive and south-bound traffic the other. For the reason that two drives intersect in an "X" at this point it has been one of the busiest spots of automobile accidents in the world. It is hoped that the installation of this light will reduce casualties at this point. The island is black and white.

Carburetor Adjustment Is Need of Automobile

Automobile owners who are having trouble getting mileage out of their gasoline consumption may find that by having their carburetors adjusted carefully increases in fuel economy can be obtained.

This is the advice given by the Associated Advertising Clubs in a bulletin issued by its vigilance committee reporting investigation of claims made for a carburetor advertised as sure to save one-half to one-third on fuel and to increase the power of any motor from 30 to 50 per cent.

The bulletin states that tests made by the United States bureau of standards was to the effect that the extravagantly advertised carburetor showed no marks of superiority over others, and that the government bureau stated great numbers of automobiles are being operated with a considerable excess of fuel under average conditions, and careful readjustment of the carburetors would in many cases bring about worth-while economy. The government bureau also pointed out that the apparent superiority of some carburetors for which overdrawn claims are made is due to the care with which they are adjusted.

THE HIGH CROWN REGISTERS.

(By Eleanor Gunn.)

The postillion crown, originating with Reboux, is the most radical development in millinery this season. Gold and silver have, appropriately enough—especially when the hat is felt—been chosen as a trimming. Reports come from Paris that chic women continue to favor black hats, yet everywhere one turns in this country one sees hats brilliant to the extreme.

Here is a trio of French hats which show that Paris approves the new high crown, and finds favor in the unbound felt brim and the use of felt instead of ribbon for the band. The first hat is in Lanvin green felt. The second model is Reboux's own conception of the crown made popular by her. In this instance she chooses to bind and band the hat with velvet and elects to use a deeper tone of cork for the velvet than for the felt.

Authoritative style critics affirm that the high crowned hat is ideal for the more mature woman, and, considering what this vast army of women have endured during the regime of the cloche, it is welcome news that milliners are considering something flattering for her.

That hats are carrying more trimming can be proved no more convincingly than by showing this (third) model from Rose Descat. This modiste, who has been the vogue for several seasons, was the great exponent of the cloche, and the hat which, while intricately made, was devoid of all but a minimum amount of trimming. In this instance, she has chosen glycerined ostrich pompon as a trimming; the hat being felt with inverted brim.

While the cloche cannot fail to continue throughout the season, it is not to be banked on for fall.

Long-Distance Watering

Cane fields of one of the largest sugar companies in Hawaii are watered by means of a canal and ditch which convey the water from the mountains, 50 miles away.

Recent out of door events, such as fashionable horse shows and water sports—the June social calendar always being liberally sprinkled with such events, as well as weddings—prove that there is a leaning toward horsehair hats, not in large garden types, but in more compact shapes with closely applied novelty feathers or clusters of such flowers as are deemed appropriate; namely, gardenias, pond lilies, also owl heads and other clever man-made birds. While Bankkok is the most approved straw for sports wear, this transparent braid—termed "crin" by the French—is worth watching for when real hot weather descends upon us. The lighter our hats are, of course, the better. Yet we go on wearing felts; in fact show no tendency to give them up even after several summers' reign.

It has become the fad to leave one's felt hat brim unbound; an English rather than a French interpretation of the mode which seems to savor of kinship with men's sports hats.

Health Scholarship Winners Urge Tooth Brush Drill For Pupils

When Alice went down the rabbit hole on her way to Wonderland you will recall that she tasted of the little bottle labeled "Drink Me" and then to her dismay she began to shrink and shrink and shrink. Perhaps these two young ladies shown above are two adventuring Alices, for the toothbrushes are evidently too large for them. What do you suppose really happened?

A toothbrush can't grow. Even if the Duchess commanded it, the most obliging toothbrush would be at a loss what to do. Even if the Duchess lost her well-known temper and cried "Off with their heads" the toothbrushes would have to submit helplessly. But wait! Perhaps there is a chance for them! A reprieve!

A toothbrush is a pretty important part of anyone's equipment. That's what the teachers in the public schools have been trying to impress on a great many, who have been rather disposed to consider toothbrushes as, at most, a nuisance.

It is quite possible someone may have taken it into his head to make a couple of toothbrushes grow very large so as to emphasize the importance of clean teeth.

These are two such unusual brushes, grown large at the command of the Duchess of Health. They made their appearance on the Pacific coast where apples and trees and things often grow very large. People out there are often inclined to look at things in a large way and this is the result.

As a matter of fact these two Alices are pupils of Miss Dora Savage, a teacher at San Francisco, who won a $500 health teaching scholarship in the contest conducted this year by the American Child Health Association. The $25,000, needed for fifty such scholarships awarded to elementary school teachers in fifty cities, was furnished by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in order to promote good health teaching and thus improve the health of the children of to-day and the grown-ups of to-morrows.

During the year the toothbrush has grown larger and larger in the minds of children everywhere in America as a result of this contest and clean teeth is but one of the Rules of the Game of Health which Miss Savage and the other teachers have emphasized.

SAINTS WHO MADE IMPRESS ON TIMES

Four Most Worthy of the Honors Paid Them

The neighbors spent a wonderful night, there awhile back in the green Verdugo hills. They were gathered together in the little gray house in the hollow that has the two big rocks behind it and the lilac bush in front, writes John Steven McGroarty in the Los Angeles Times.

And the talk that came up was about four great saints who have left their everlasting footprints on the sands of time.

The way the talk about saints came up was that the man who reads the papers was saying that he had read a piece which said that in the house of parliament in London four great windows had been installed, and that on each window was a fine picture of a saint.

On one window a picture of St. George of England, on the second St. David of Wales, on the third St. Andrew of Scotland, and on the fourth St. Patrick of Ireland.

Now, this mere statement of itself, as you might say, was not of such a startling nature as to make a night wonderful for the neighbors in the green Verdugo hills or for anybody else. But, what did make the night wonderful was that our neighbor, the man who knows about the saints, was given the floor. And he told all that there is to tell, or nearly as much, anyway, about the four saints in whose honor windows have been put in the British parliament house.

And it was a grand story. The story of great men who had labored and had spent their lives in the service of God, and of their fellowmen, which is the same thing. The torchbearers of the Wanderer of Galilee in the isles of the Narrow Seas—that's what they were—George and David, Patrick and Andrew.

Kings there have been in the isles of the Narrow Seas—many and many a king who wore jeweled crowns on their heads, and who sat on golden thrones. Kings, and queens also, some of them good and some of them bad, and some neither one nor the other. And there have been warriors in the isles of the Narrow Seas, and statesmen; money-changers have been there, as they still are there; and this man and that have been there, each having his little hour and his day.

But it is George of the Dragon, gentle David of Wales, strong Andrew of Scotland, and noble Patrick of Ireland who are remembered most and who are most revered in the isles of the Narrow Seas.

Torchbearers of Him who was slain on the bloody Tree of Calvary. It is they who are remembered best.

Harry Greb, of Pittsburgh, retained his title as middleweight champion of the world in a 15-round fight to a decision in New York City against Ted Moore, of England. The Hon. "The Hunchback Of Notre Dame"

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" the massive and much heralded film production of Victor Hugo's story masterpiece, which swept into overnight fame in New York, will be given its premier at the Opera House Monday, when it begins a four day engagement.

Lon Chaney, admittedly the finest interpreter of unusual character roles on either stage or screen, plays the stellar part of "Quasimodo," the deformed bell-ringer of Notre Dame, with Ernest Torrence as "Clopin" the under-world king; and Patsy Ruth Miller as "Esmeralda."

Carl Laemmle, who founded Universal City out in southern California, it is said, has achieved something there which awakens the utmost admiration. He has taken Hugo's rather turgid melodramatic novel, and after building a replica of Paris's famous cathedral, he has retold Hugo's story in pictures—vital, vivid pictures that hold the attention and excite admiration by their undeniable power and beauty. Among the other principals in the big cast are: Norman Kerry, who plays "Phoebus"; Tully Marshall, as "Louis XI"; Raymond Hatton as "Gringoire"; Nigel de Brulier as "Dom Claude", and Gladys Brockwell as the crazy "Godule." With "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" it is said, that a "different picture" has arrived, one that marks the dawn of a new era in cinema art and one that has made Carl Laemmle's slogan of "better and finer productions" an absolute fact.

Woodpeckers and Putty

The theory of ornithologists that the woodpecker pecks for worms and insects alone has lately been upset. There is a water tank in Sully, Iowa, that supplies the town's water. In 1922 woodpeckers drilled so many holes through the wooden sides of the tank that the insulation against freezing was demolished. These holes were puttied over, and the putty was afterward painted. But in the summer of 1923, the persevering woodpeckers pecked all the paint and putty out of the tank.

In a late cold spell in Sully, the water supply suddenly gave out. Upon investigation, the tank was found to be full of ice, and the putty all gone. Mayor Fred Andreas has decided that the old plant will have to be torn down and a peck-proof one erected in its place. It is now left to ornithologists to explain why the woodpecker prefers putty to wood—or grubs.

Boat Travels Fast

Seventy miles an hour in three inches of water is the astonishing performance claimed for a revolutionary type of air-propelled glider boat developed by F. W. Davies of Dudley, England, writes a correspondent of the Detroit News.

An airplane propeller and engine drive the hydroglider, says Popular Science Monthly. Thus the enormous friction exerted by the water upon high-speed propeller blades is avoided and the navigation of the glider in shallow water is made possible. Even the main rudder operates by deflecting air instead of water. There are two small auxiliary rudders, which are used for maneuvering the boat into dockage or for similar purposes, but these are lifted from the water as soon as the craft is under way. The hull is scow shaped and about 15 feet long.

Destruction of Forests

Fire loss in the forests of America each year covers a total area more than eight times that left devastated in France at the end of the great war.

TODAY WE CELEBRATE

A DUSKY CLEOPATRA.

The ancient chroniclers have it that "a spirit more odious, licentious, bloodthirsty and cruel never inhabited the form of woman" than that of Anna Zinga, who was born in Matamba, Africa, in 1582. Yet for understanding and ability she was far beyond not only her own people, but also before many of the members of the superior races. Her father was a native king. Zinga exhibited both craft and management in getting the better of her brothers, and, upon the death of her father, investing herself with the sacred character of priestess, soon became the leader of her people.

At that time the Dutch and Portuguese were attempting a rival influence in Africa for commercial purposes, religious difficulties became involved in this rivalry, and Anna Zinga was quick to appreciate that, by skillful methods she would be the gainer in this rivalry, and was also appreciative of the advantages she could derive from the Christians. She visited the Portuguese settlement, ingratiated herself with the governor, and was baptized. With Portuguese aid she soon made herself predominant among all the local tribes, destroyed all that she had reason to fear as rivals. For a long time she reigned feared and respected, over the tribes, but frightful acts of diabolic cruelty perpetrated by her turned her people into trembling slaves, and she soon wearied, after her intercourse with the whites, in this fateful homage, and preceiving that the introduction of Christianity alone could improve her people, she sent for priests and again became a nominal member of the Christian church. She was now 65 years old, and had she lived her foresight and progress might have had tremendous effect on the future of the African peoples, but a sudden sickness ended her life in 1663 With her courage, vigor, native capacity and energy she was naturally formed for government, and would, in a different land with suitable education made a great queen, for despite her hardness of heart, she made a better ruler than any king of her race had ever done.

"THE FATHER OF TENNESSEE."

"The Father of Tennessee" is the title bestowed by historians on Captain James Robertson, who was born 182 years ago today. Robertson led a company of immigrants from North Carolina into Tennessee and settled on Watauga river in 1768. The pioneers leased their land from the Cherokees and organized themselves into a body politic, adopting a code of laws signed by each individual member of the community of adult years. Others soon joined them and planted other settlements. These early immigrants were the seeds of civilization in the Tennessee wilderness. In 1779 Capt Robertson and others from the Watauga settlement crossed the Cumberland Mountains, pitched their tents near French Lick, and planted a field of corn where Nashville now stands. The site was chosen for a village at first called Nashboro, but changed to Nashville in 1781.

On this date—1809 the first S. S. on Lake Champlain arrived at St. Johns, Canada, from Burlington, Vt.

Commodore Decatur, one of the greatest American naval heroes, arrived off the coast of Algiers on June 28, 1815.

On this day in 1836 James Madison fourth president of the United States died aged eighty-six years. On the very same day the coronation of Queen Victoria took place in London. The National Deaf-Mute College was opened at Washington on June 28, 1864. The only one of its kind in the world.

Health Officers at Conference

Local Health Officials Return from State Conference at Saratoga Where Subjects Relating to Public Health Were Discussed.

Dr. Daniel Connelly, health officer for the city of Kingston; Dr. Henry Van Hoevenberg, health officer for the town of Ulster; Dr. George F. Rice, Mrs. Mary E. O'Neil, nurse for the Kingston board of health, and Miss Loretta C. Nolan, secretary of the board of health and registrar of vital statistics, have returned from the 24th annual conference of local health officers and public health nurses of New York state which was held at Saratoga Springs, June 24, 25 and 26. They report that this year's conference with a total registration of 1,036 was one of the most successful ever held.

Among the important addresses was one by Dr. V. A. Moore, professor of comparative pathology at the New York State Veterinary College, Cornell University, on the subject of Bovine Tuberculosis. Dr. Moore criticized the usual methods of dealing with tuberculosis cattle and called attention to the more conservative way in which the matter is handled in Europe. There physically diseased cattle are slaughtered, those reacting to the tuberculin test that are kept entirely separate from the healthy ones and the calves are fed on pasteurized milk or on that from healthy cows. As a result, in from three to five years the tuberculosis animals disappear and are replaced by healthy cattle that have been raised from the herd.

Dr. F. W. Laidlaw, district state health officer, described the results of his work with toxin-antitoxin in the control of a diphtheria epidemic.

A most interesting paper was delivered by Dr. Frank Overton, executive editor of the New York State Journal of Medicine, who told the health officers and nurses how they could improve health conditions in their respective communities by well chosen publicity.

There were many other interesting and important addresses.

Great Progress by Dairy League

President Slocum In His Annual Address Points Out What Individual Responsibility Means To Association—Gross Sales For Year $75,132,468.64.

Over 2,000 farmers attended the fifth annual meeting of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc., held recently at Utica, N. Y. The all day session was marked by an enthusiasm and unanimity that gave unmistakable evidence that the organized dairymen are satisfied they are succeeding in their cooperative marketing operations. Confidence was the dominant note.

The business of the day was transacted by 690 accredited delegates, representing a membership of over 65,000. In the great audience were representatives from twenty-five or thirty city and town banks scattered throughout League territory, who were greatly impressed with the association's achievements for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1924, the third year of the pooling plan.

"I challenge any cooperative association in the country to show a better record," said President Slocum, after giving figures showing that despite agricultural depression and the low level of milk prices great gains were made by the organization over the preceding year.

Gains Made By League.

Some of these gains were:

Increase of 20 cents per 100 pounds of milk in the average gross pool price ($2.10).

Increase of 18 cents in the average net pool price ($2.01).

Increase of 22½ cents in the average cash distribution to members ($1.917).

Decrease of $.0419 in average deductions for certificates of indebtedness ($.0957).

Decrease of $.0079 per 100 pounds in administrative charges ($.0616).

The gross sales for the year amounted to $75,132,468.64, a figure that made some of the bankers whistle.

The total milk handled by the association was 3,095,000,000 lbs.

Farmers Can Solve Problems.

Mr. Slocum emphasized the fact that the association has proved conclusively that it can stabilize the markets when the producers have been well organized. He pointed out what individual responsibility and individual support mean to the association.

"There is no mystery about this so-called spread between the pool and the average classified price," he said. "It is the price League farmers are paying to build their business and to protect the markets this great organization serves. All dairymen are paying the penalty because of the desperate efforts of the few to evade their fair share of the costs of handling their supplies."

Mr. Slocum declared an outstanding accomplishment of the association is increased efficiency within the organization.

"We have established ourselves on a cost basis and have tightened our control on every operation," he added: "Every effort has been made to eliminate expense."

In conclusion, he said "There is no marketing problem today that cannot be solved if the farmers want it solved. The problem is entirely in their hands. I am sure our members know this and will continue to press forward with unrelenting vigor."

The League's Finances.

The financial strength of the organization is shown by the following from the annual report of the treasurer, Chester Young: Cash in bank, $3,057,375.84; plants and equipment after charging off depreciation and mortgages, $5,872,690.83; other assets, $8,994,057.22. The current assets are more than double the current liabilities. The excess of the current assets over current liabilities are sufficient to pay 52 per cent of all of the outstanding certificates of indebtedness without considering the real estate values which have been more than conservately depreciated.

Officers Elected.

The new board of directors elected officers for the year 1924-1925 as follows:

President, G. W. Slocum, Milton, Pa.; first vice president, J. D. Miller, Susquehanna, Pa.; second vice president, John D. Smith, Walton, N. Y.; secretary, J. A. Coulter, Woodville, N. Y.; treasurer, Chester Young, Napanoch, N. Y.; executive committee, Paul Smith, Newark Valley, N. Y.; W. U. Rixford, Wellsville, N. Y. President Slocum is ex-officio a member of the committee and acts as chairman.

All the other officers were reelected.

The directors also reappointed J. D. Miller, general counsel; Bradley Fuller, associate counsel; and named Miss Priscilla E. Rowe of Otisville, N. Y., as assistant to the secretary.

Three Traffic Violators.

Between 3 and 4 o'clock this morning Officer Fout made three arrests of automobilists, charging them with cutting to the left of traffic standards on the uptown streets. John Fredericks of East Kingston, Emerson DuBois of Woodstock, and Michael Keohone of Bloomfield, N. J., were the three arrested. All gave bail for their appearance later in police court.

Convention In Recess

sented headed by Mr. Baker of Ohio.

"But the difficulties I have referred to is but a part of the story.

Great Differences on One Plank.

"There remained one plank with which we had to deal. I regret to say great differences of opinion arose. The sub-committee considered it for hours. It was unable to agree unanimously and last night the full committee discussed the plank dealing with religious freedom.

Asks Recess Until 3 p. m.

"And so," he said, "remembering our responsibility, remembering our glorious heritage, and the wonderful opportunity ahead of this party and in order to save for America a united Democratic party I come to you now and backed with the unanimous consent of the 54 members of the resolutions committee, I ask that this convention stand in recess until 3 p. m. to give us an opportunity to try to compose our differences.

Finally Thought About Party.

"That discussion continued all night. There was hours and hours of it. I regret to say that the discussion became more and more heated. It became somewhat acrimonious. And when we realized that a committee of 54 would exhibit feeling of that character we wondered if the full convention should be thrown into similar debate. We began to think about the Democratic party. We begun to think of its future, to recall its history. We went back to that glorious heritage that comes from Jefferson and Wilson.

Sought to Unite Democracy.

"We thought all that might be involved and then we drew closer together, friends about the table, to see if we could not devise some way to meet this problem, so that America could have a united Democratic party.

Unusual Scene at 6 a. m.

"And after mature deliberation we concluded that we ought to have on that particular subject an opportunity for further conference. Let me add this—in all my experience in the party I have never witnessed such a scene as took place this morning in that committee room at six o'clock when we had completed our deliberations.

Bryan Supplemented Lord's Prayer.

"When we had completed our deliberations and were about to disperse one of the members arose and recited the Lord's prayer. And we all united in it and at the close Mr. Bryan lifted up his voice in invocation for guidance and for divine help in this hour of stress. I don't think I ought to say these things. But they did occur. I am reporting to you exactly what happened. And so at the unanimous request of the resolutions committee I stand here and ask this great convention to recess today until 3 p. m.

Delegates Under Cummings's Spell.

Under the spell of Cummings's dramatic story and appeal, the rumbling disappointment of the delegates melted away and on the vote there was not a dissenting voice raised against the extension of time for which the tired platform builder pleaded.

"You heard the motion" said Walsh. "All in favor, say 'aye.'"

"Aye" yelled the delegates.

There was no "noes" and the convention recessed until 3 p. m.

The Garden emptied slowly. The delegates stood around and discussed this one burning issue of the convention long after the gavel had ended the session.

Financial and Commercial

By Telegraph to The Freeman

New York, June 28.—While the buying of the department store stocks was the most prominent feature of the short session of the stock market today, speculative attention was by no means monopolized by these stocks. After the first half hour, during which prices resumed their vigorous forward swing, the market turned to the coppers, rails and specialties, the coppers being the most active.

Kresge Department Stores opened 2 points higher and before the end of the first half hour rose 5 points to 62½, after which it encountered profit taking.

All of the copper stocks were strong today, Anaconda rising nearly 2 points to 31, Smelters up 1¾ at 65¾; Cerro De Pasco up 1½ at 47½; Inspiration up 1⅛ at 24½; Kennecott, Utah, United States Smelters, Miami up about one point.

Lehigh Valley and New York, Chicago and St. Louis featured the railroad list both going into new high for the year, the former at 47⅞ and the latter at 94.

New Haven was the leader in the low price group, with a fractional advance in price.

The oil stocks were taken in hand in the second hour, and a moderate upward movement was evident in Cosden, Phillips, Pure Oil, Sinclair, California Petroleum and the Pan Americans.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday "Circus Days" with Jackie Coogan, as the star of a five-ring show all under the big top. The most popular book of circus life for twenty years screened at last amid the atmosphere and glamor of the greatest game in the world. This story is adapted from James Otis' celebrated story of circus life "Toby Tyler" (Ten weeks with a circus).

The Kingston Opera House offers five acts of exceptional vaudeville again tonight and the photoplay, "The Steadfast Heart," the appealing Collier's Weekly story of the lawless Virginia Hills, made into a beautiful romance of the screen. Mary Alden, Marguerite Courtot, and Joseph Depew have the leading roles.

At the Auditorium tonight a big picture Gloria Swanson in "The Humming Bird." Gloria Swanson in her first dual role. As a French vixen who masquerades in boys' clothes and has all Paris gasping at her lawless exploits.

An Ecstatic Lover

When the sunlight is kissing the softness
Of your dear mouth's tender curve—
When the wind and the waves are petting you
With such familiar nerve,
Then I'm jealous of the elements,
And wishing I could be
Your elemental sweetheart
For you are that to me.

When the radio phone is caressing
The pink of your lovely ear,
When the loud speaker is boldly holding
Your breathless attention, my
    dear,
Then I'm jealous of your listening,
And wishing I could be
Your favorite radio sweetheart
And you'd tune in with me.

—Norton Stutson

Oneonta Won Friday's Game

Schirickmen Lose To Oneonta Giants In First Game at Oneonta—Colonials Playing Oneonta Again Today.

The Colonials lost a hard fought contest to the Oneonta team at the latter's court Friday, by a 7 to 6 tally. Lodestra, a former Oneonta pitcher, was on the mound for the Schirickmen and held the winners in check throughout the game. In the last inning, Coutant was given the pitching assignment when the winning run crossed the plate.

Both teams collected eight hits, during the struggle. Three errors were made by the winners. The Colonials fielded perfectly.

For the first three innings the locals had an easy time, scoring six runs and holding the Giants scoreless. When the last half of the ninth started the score was 6 to 4 in the local's favor. Three runs for the home club in the ninth settled the issue.

The score:

Brooklyn Team Seeks Games.

The Ozone Red Sox, a neatly uniformed team and one of the best light semi-pro teams in Brooklyn, would like to hear from teams in that class. French Fighter Training Here

Yves Horellou, Junior Lightweight, Who Fights Harry Mulachy at Fourth of July Bouts Here, is in Kingston Training for the Fight.

Yves Horellou, the French fighter, who will mix it up for eight rounds with Harry Mulachy of Richmond Hill, at the Fourth of July fights at the Kingston Fair Grounds, is now in Kingston training with Don Hyatt and Joe Werner, who will also appear on the card that evening.

Horellou two weeks ago defeated Tommy Duffy, the lad who won the decision over Joe Coffey at the last bouts here. Duffy weighed 147 pounds while the French fighter weighed but 131 pounds. He was brought over here by Descamp, manager of Georges Carpentier, and during his ring career has fought 46 fights in Australia, England, Ireland and France. In Argentina he fought in two battles royal, each consisting of four colored battlers and himself. He came out of these battles a winner, disposing of his eight opponents. The boys he fought ranged from lightweights to middleweights.

Mulachy is under the wing of Doc. Bagley, who fight fans know managed Willie Jackson and many other topnotchers, which is an assurance that Mulachy is on the way to the top of the pugilistic ladder. He is known as a knockout boxer, and has had considerable ring experience.

The eight rounds between the Frenchman and Mulachy should provide plenty of thrills to the fans, but it is hardly likely that the bout will go the limit as both boys carry the sleep punch concealed in their mitt.

Tannersville at Coxsackie.

The Tannersville team will journey to Coxsackie for a game with the team representing the latter place on Tuesday. As Tannersville hasn't lost a game and Coxsackie has struck its stride as indicated by their record of last week when they played Chappie Johnson to a ten inning 2 to 2 tie and breaking even with Larry Doyle's Glens Falls team, losing Saturday and taking the Sunday game, a good game is assured.

White Plains Here Tomorrow

The Colonial baseball team, after a week of out of town games, will play at the Fair Grounds Sunday, when the fast White Plains team makes its first appearance here this season. The White Plains team for the past several seasons had a baseball club that was considered one of the best in semi-pro circles and this year it is said is no exception. A number of college stars have been added to the White Plains team, which makes the team still stronger.

The Schirickmen for the past week have been playing quite steadily, which naturally has exhausted the pitching staff. Just who will receive the hurling job on Sunday remains to be seen. Possibly a new addition to the local club, which is badly needed, in view of the forthcoming schedule of games, will do the mound work.

After a week's rest, local fandom is expected to turn out strong Sunday to see the home club again in action. The game will be called at the usual Sunday hour.

Silk Mills Won From Schillings

U. & D. Team Heads Industrial League Without a Defeat—Fullers Play League Leaders Monday.

Friday evening at Hasbrouck Park the Silk Mills Nine of the Industrial League beat the Schilling team by a 21 to 14 tally. In the third inning the winners broke loose for a total of ten runs, which was too big of a handicap for the Schillings to overcome. Eight errors on the part of the losers, contributed toward the winners' large total of runs.
